

Australian Expats stories from abroad

These stories from Australians living and working overseas will warm your heart, stir the emotions, and provide fresh insights into what it's like to come from Down-Under.

From an 18-year-old au pair in Paris to expats who have been living overseas for 20 or more years, they still call themselves Australian.

This first ever collection of stories chronicling the personal journeys of Australian expats is a joint project between Global Exchange and the Southern Cross Group. Australians all over the world were invited to 'tell their story' and they did, with enough to fill several books.

The Southern Cross Group is an international volunteer non-profit advocacy and support organisation for the Australian diaspora. The Group lobbies to reduce some of the legal, administrative and technical barriers faced by those living away from 'home'. For more information, and to read some of the many stories which could not be included in this volume, see www.southern-cross-group.org.

Anne MacGregor is a co-founder of the Southern Cross Group who works in Brussels as an EU trade and competition lawyer. She is also a solicitor in England and Wales, an Attorney in New York and an Australian qualified lawyer and Registered Migration Agent.

Bryan Havenhand is a publisher and has written a number of books and articles on working overseas, especially for those from Down-Under.
