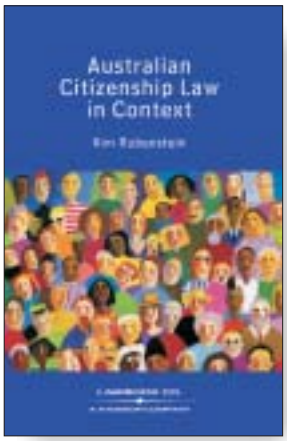
Australian Citizenship Law in Context

Kim Rubenstein



Citizenship is the pivotal legal status in any nation-state. For Australia, the democratic, social and political framework, and its identity as a nation, is shaped by the notion of citizenship.

Australian Citizenship Law in Context sheds light on citizenship law and practice in the broader context. It also provides the most up-to-date analysis available of the Australian Citizenship Act 1948 and its future direction, plus the first comprehensive listing and analysis of legislation that discriminates upon the basis of citizenship and residence.

A must-read for migration agents and legal practitioners working in the area of citizenship law, migration law and constitutional and administrative law, this is also a valuable resource for any discipline interested in citizenship.

Author, Kim Rubenstein, is a senior lecturer in law at The University of Melbourne.
